Munro Electrical launches solar division

December 26, 2008 6:00 PM

FALL RIVER, Mass. — Munro Electrical Distributing, a 66-year old family-owned company, has launched a new solar division that will sell solar powered products to commercial and home consumers.

To show the effectiveness of solar power, the company installed solar panels on the roof of its 100-year-old Fall River headquarters. The system has cut Munro's electric bill by approximately one third a month and in two months has reduced carbon emissions by 4,400 pounds.

"Our goal in taking the lead and installing this system on our roof is simple; we want to demonstrate that if solar energy can work on a 100-year old building in an old mill city, it can work anywhere," said Brian Munro, Munro president. "Solar energy systems work for any commercial, government, or residential building since they can be designed and built for the needs of each customer, regardless of size."

Munro took advantage of state and federal rebates and tax incentives and will sell excess energy generated back to the electrical company. It expects the system to pay for itself within seven years.
